

Kim Scott and Heidi Nichols Skin Corrective Centre

Since opening the doors to The Skin Corrective Centre in May 2009, sisters Kim Scott and Heidi Nichols have watched their business grow from strength to strength after identifying a niche market between doctors, beauty therapists and dermatologists.

Starting with three staff members in 2009 a further five fully-trained aestheticians and two part-time plastic surgeons are now employed at the Centre. Along with moving premises to accommodate the high demand for services from four rooms to nine rooms at their Brisbane Street location, the sisters are now set to embark on their next big adventure.

“We have recently purchased a large block of land at Blueridge Business Park and are looking forward to constructing a purpose built premises to service our growing clientele,” Heidi said.

Returning to their home town to establish their business was an easy choice for the sisters. “Kim and I both felt that bringing up children with our families close by, in a safe country community was what was best for all of us, Heidi said. “The space, the people, the community feel. It was all a very big part of why we returned,” she said.

“Life in the country means your home isn’t squashed in on top of your neighbours. Your children have room to run, play, and be kids without worry. Families can spread out among their properties and give everyone some elbow room.”

According to Heidi, The Skin Corrective Centre was a lifelong dream for the sisters, to provide Dubbo with an educational, professional and cutting edge centre that would deliver the best and most current access to skincare treatments and advice.

“We have recently purchased a large block of land and are looking forward to constructing a purpose built premises to service our growing clientele.”

“As teenagers Kim and I experienced severe acne and it was from this horrendous experience and with limited access to information/ education and professional advice in Dubbo, which initiated our interest in the anatomy and physiology of the skin,” she said.

“With the experience that we gained and relationships that were established, we began planning how we could bring professional scientific, refined skincare education to the Central West.

“Kim’s international experience and my time spent working under Cosmetic Physician, Dr Douglas Grose equipped us with the tools to confidently open a skincare clinic in Dubbo which encompassed our philosophies.”

The Centre’s primary business activities include skincare education, intense pulsed light and microdermabrasion, which are carried out by highly trained professional therapists.

“Therapists that can provide such advice and perform these treatments are rare and highly sought after,” Heidi said. “Therapists require considerable medical training, certification and a clear understanding of skin anatomy and physiology in order to gain certification to use such technologies.

“As our business name suggests, we are leaders in our field in providing sound education and safe, effective skin correction.”
